As much as the environmental factors are responsible for infertility, the genetic factors contribute for the infertility in an individual.

Recent research has been done which shows the relation between "Thrombophilia" and "Repeated implantation Failure." Thrombophilia is a condition in which the individual has a problem in normal blood coagulation and can further lead to thrombosis (clot formation in blood vessels). There are various factors like FVL (Factor V Leiden Mutation); MTHFR (Methylenetetrahydrofolate reductase).

The recurrent pregnancy loss (RPL) has unexplained causes but 50% of the known causes include anatomical, hormonal and chromosomal abnormalities in parents as well as prothrombotic abnormalities.

Anti-phospholipid Syndrome (APS); as acquired form of thrombophilia, is considered an established risk factor for recurrent miscarriage. As per the study, about 68.9% of women suffering from RPL were detected with the presence of the acquired and inherited thrombophilic factor.

Conclusion : Thrombophilia has a significant role in IVF-embryo transfer implantation failure.

Women with repeated IVF-embryo transfer failure should be screened for thrombophilia.
